We hear from Colombo, says the Singapore Free Press some interesting details concerning the steam making qualities of Labran Coal, a quantity of which was taken for trial by the French mail steamer Melbourne, the vessel by which Sir Frederick Weld went home. About the second or third day out Labuan coal was burned and it was observed that the revolutions of the engine dropped four per minute under the number given by Welsh coal. On the following day could burned in the proportions of one-third Laboan and two-thirds Cardiff. This gave a better result. During the following days Labuan coal and Cardiff coal was burned same number of revolutions were obtained par minute as that obtained by burning Cardiff coal entirely. The increase in consumption produced by burning half-and-half Labuan and Cardiff was between three and four per cent only. Capt. Vimont of the Mclbourns declares that he is much pleased with the result. The success of this experiment should serve to encourage the more general use of Labuan coal in combination with Cardiff THE Shen pao thus relator the experience of some Russian tea merchants who went up country to the districts :- Some Russian merchants with compradores and assistants obtained passports from the Oustoms Taotal of Kiukiang to go into the sea-producing districts of Wuning and Ningohow, with the intention of examining the tea-growth, cultivation, picking and manufacture of the plant. On reaching Winning they verified the passports and proceeded into the mountains. The journey, however, was not pleasant, as all slong the route crowds of of men. women and children followed and made fun of the party. Following the advice of the compradores the Russians donned the native coatume and continued their course for Ningchow. This did not do them much good, as the tes-pickers among the mountains heard of the foreigners' coming and abandoned their work expressly with hope of catching a night of the strangers. To put a stop to the many annoying questions the Chinese dressed Russians told the mountaineers that they were natives of Cantour and that the forand delay was avoided. The Ningchow prefecture was at last reached and protection in the form of soldiers was asked of the Prefect, who informed them that he could not order soldiers but he would give them supple protection by a corps of runners, The Russians, bowever, were advised to no knowing how the people would be distion with the Grant of Letters Patent in posed towards them, as they had never beforeseen foreigners. They accordingly made

The audience was necessarily a will include scenes from 'tlamlet,' smaller one than Mrs Potter and Mr Ballow have been accustomed to appear before, but the playgoing community here is not lar e, and when this fact is considered it will be evident that only something of unusual excellence could have induced so many people to spend evening in so oncomfortable a place as the theatre is at this period of the year.

Mrs Potter's Juliei hus won high oncomiums wherever she has performed the part. It is by no means an easy part, even amongst the heroines of Shakespeare. Juliot's virginal freshnoss and ingennousness in the earlier scenes, the awakening of the transforming passion of first love, the sudden transition from the naivete and coyness of us sophisticated girlhood to flie deep and powerful emolious of womanhood dominated and slorified by an all-sperificing love ; the unquestioning, unwavering faith with which the heroins follows wherever love leads, although it is by a road whose terrors might appai the bravest to faithfully pourtray all this in natural sequence requires rare powers and poculiar gifts. Such gifts nature has bestowed on Mrs Potter with a generous hand; and along with these she brings to the interpretation of the character of the hapless Juliet a prire and intense womanly sympathy, keen intellilines. A commonplace physiognomy can never by any process of elaborate make-up he the face of one's ideal Juliet; but Mrs Potter needs no aid from art in this respect, for she has only to be herself to realise all that the imagination looks for of sweetness and tenderness and warmth of passion in the fair young daughter of the Capulets. In the balcony scene, which was the opening one on Saturday night, Mrs. Potter made an immediate and complete conquest of her audience. Every accent and gesture expressive of her varying moods seemed natural and graceful, Juliot's innocent confession of love; and her assumption of men. alarm when she finds that Romeo has overheard her, were admirably depicted; and one could see, as the scene progressed, the. light of the newborn passion shining tremulously through the thin veils of maidenly archness and reserve, until at loogth it came out clear and, radiant in the words :-

mitted themselves to free education; but much diversity of opinion as to how the new departure would affect the party's future. No one doubts that the Government has made the comp with a view to a general Conservatives who dislike the measure accept it because of their desire to associate the name of the party with an immense boon to town workingmen and rural laborers, but the Liberals reason that Tory action cannot take from them the credit of the measure for which they have long The opposition has further and stronger reasons to hail the Government scheme; containing, as it does, abundant possibilities for party disruption and widespread national discontent. There will probably be denominational trouble, etc. According to high authority the Cabinet plans, however, simply involve full education in lower standards, assisted education to denominational schools. No change is to be made in the system of control, except that parents shall have power to elect part of the board. The solid opposition of the Liberals on the latter point may give the Conservatives a discatrous check on the eve of the dissolution. The Foreign Office has received alarme ing advice from Liabon. The English Minister at Glynn-Petric, represents the political situation as critical. The Porturuese Cabinet ought to submit the new English convention to the Cortes on May 5th, but the Premier pleads for an extension of the modus vivendi and delay in the publishing of the convention, in order to give time for the statement of the excitement against England, which is imperiling the position of the Government.

The Newfoundland delegates express homselves gratified at their reception in the House of Lords. Since their statement in the Lords they have received many encouraging promises of support from officers and members of the Com-

Gladstone has decided to sapport the Divorce Reform bill introduced by Hunter. This has amezed the Liberals, who believed he would oppose any extension of divorce as a matter of religious principle. The bill entitles the wife to dissolution of the marriage tie in the event of adultery or lour years' desertion on the part of the husband. The House of Lords will reject it, as the bishops will congregate against it.
